

『いただきます』

Hyogo Boys: どうも、Hyogo Boys です。よろしくおねがいします。

Ryuji: Now we are studying Japanese, right?

Masato: Yes, Japanese is pretty hard, but it's interesting.

Ryuji: We've just learned about some greetings in Japanese, haven't we?

For example, Japanese people always say something particular before eating.

Did you know that?

Masato: Of course. I always say it before I eat.

Ryuji: OK. So, let's give it a go! I will pretend to be your mother and you will be my child.

Masato: You will be my mother? It's hard to imagine.

Ryuji: What's the problem? Let's give it a go!

Masato: ただいま。

Ryuji: おかえり。

Masato: I'm hungry.

Ryuji: Hang on a minute.

Masato: I can't wait.

Ryuji: Just wait!

Masato: She is so scary. I'm going to die.

Ryuji: It's dinner time. テリヤキチキンです。

Masato: Oh, looks good.

Ryuji: Yes, it does.

Masato: I'm happy.

Ryuji: Yes, you are.

Masato: I'm starving.

Ryuji: Wait. What are you doing now? Before you eat, you have to say something, don't we?

Masato: Oh, sorry mum. I forgot that.

Ryuji: Please put your hands together.

Masato: いってきます。

Ryuji: なんでやねん！

Where are you going?

いってきます is what we say when we leave home.

Masato: いってきます is what we say when we leave home.

Sorry, mum. My mistake.

Ryuji: Just stay here. Don't go anywhere.

Masato: OK.

Ryuji: Please put your hands together.

Masato: いらっしやい。

Ryuji: なんでやねん！

Who came to your home?

いらっしやい is what we say when somebody comes to your home.

Like "Welcome to my home!"

Masato: What? My stomach is welcoming food.

That's why I said it. Come on, mum!

Ryuji: Wait. That might make sense...No!

You can't say that in this case. Do you understand?

Masato: I understand.

Ryuji: Please put your hands together.

Masato: ごちそうさまでした。

Ryuji: もうええわ！

Hyogo Boys: どうもありがとうございました。
